*concise descriptive summary for the lab:

The Core Research Laboratory of Ardabil University of Medical Sciences was established on 15 September 2015, with the purpose of developing an integrated platform for advanced laboratory analyses and research-based services within the university. Then, based on the 317th meeting of the council for the development of medical sciences universities, held on 12 August 2020, the final approval of the laboratory was officially announced.

The center's activities include providing advanced analytical services, supporting applied and basic laboratory research, training researchers in specialized laboratory techniques, and facilitating research collaborations. These activities are carried out to enhance the scientific capacity of the university, especially in biomedical and pharmaceutical research. The center also offers laboratory services to faculty members, students, clinical units, research groups, and external organizations at both provincial and national levels.
