*concise descriptive summary for the center:

The Ardabil Social Determinants of Health Research Center was established on 20 October, 2013, with the aim of focusing on social factors affecting community health, at the Ardabil University of Medical Sciences. Then, based on the 282nd meeting of the council for the development of medical sciences universities of the country on 25 June 2021, the final approval of the research center was announced. The center's activities include expanding the research culture, conducting applied research, training, and providing prevention and treatment methods in the field of health and social health factors. These activities are carried out in order to improve the health of the community, especially in the social dimensions. The center also promotes research cooperation in order to achieve indicators of social factors affecting health and provides its services to the medical community, researchers, patients, and the general public at the provincial and national levels.
